

The core elements of life; fire, earth, air, and water, are represented in the design and layout of the Four Elements Café restaurant's interior, rightfully so amidst the preparation, serving, and partaking of food. The restaurant emulates the Navajo home, with fire being the heart, and the walls serving as protection. Designed on the café floor, fire serves as the inspiration behind the floor medallion at the entryway. Earth is represented in the wall and ceiling structures just as beautiful as the topography of Navajo land, where the wind (air), the life giver, helped to shape the peaks and plateaus. Water, with its various powers, has formed and carved the many beautiful canyons, lakes, and riverbeds of Diné Bikéyah as illustrated by the café's interior green walls. The beautiful and majestic San Francisco Peaks adorn the western skies as observed from the windows of the café. The light beams hanging inside the café represent the various colors of light emitting from the San Francisco Peaks.
